5th Annual Jefferson Women and Gastroenterology Health Symposium

February 24, 2023 | Hybrid Event

COURSE OVERVIEW

Designed for healthcare professionals specializing in Gastroenterology, Hepatology, Internal Medicine, Family Medicine, General Surgery, Colorectal Surgery, and Gynecology, this annual program will examine the medical conditions that are unique to women, occur more frequently in women, or present differently in women.

By utilizing emerging scientific and clinical evidence, experts will provide updated approaches to the diagnosis, management, and treatment of common gastrointestinal disorders aimed to improve the care of female patients.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

At the conclusion of this activity, learners will be able to:

- Differentiate the causes and treatment of dysphagia in female and male patients.
- Discuss barriers faced by women in medicine to become an influential leader.
- Compare the approaches and outcomes of surgical management of GERD for female and male patients.
- Evaluate gender differences in long-term complications and care of bariatric patients.
- Recognize the causes of chronic diarrhea in men and women.
- Distinguish the gender differences in the indications for liver biopsy in patients with chronic hepatitis.
- Discuss the presentation, diagnosis, and management of autoimmune hepatitis in women.
- Use the knowledge of the healthcare team to holistically care for patients.
